“Everywhere, Every Home is committed to authentic and relational expressions of Christ’s love and hope...”

Tanner Peake

From the President/CEO

One of my favorite questions to ask Every Home leaders from around the world is, “What does it mean, to you, to carry Christ?” Their answers are beautifully diverse.

“For me, carrying the Lord is to be conscious that the Lord is with you 24/7.” —Lidia Reaños, leading ministries across Latin America

“[Carrying Christ means] being with people and sharing their fight for hope, testifying that there is hope.” —Jaroslaw Lukasik, leading ministry in Ukraine

“[Carrying Christ] is to go and share with others the same Christ who has transformed and changed my life.” —Manasa Kolivuso, leading ministries across the Pacific

“To carry Christ in this environment, often in the midst of brokenness and division, is to become beacons of hope, beacons of love, beacons of light... It means to intentionally demonstrate acts of service, acts of empathy, and understanding.” —Aysha Hatem, leading ministries across the Middle East, North Africa, and Central Asia

“Carrying Christ, for me, is being a change agent wherever I find myself. The Bible says anywhere Jesus found himself, he was always doing good. There was always something different when he [left] the place. So wherever I find myself, I must be a change agent.” —Ebeme DaSilva, leading ministries across West Africa

These answers come from just a few of Every Home’s leaders serving in over 170 nations across the globe today. They represent the expansive scope and reach of our ministry, which exists to inspire and empower believers everywhere to carry Christ to their worlds.

Carrying Christ might look different in different contexts, locations, and cultures. Our ministry adapts to the unique callings, cultures, and needs of every community we serve. But the heart of carrying Christ runs through it all: everywhere, Every Home is committed to authentic and relational expressions of Christ’s love and hope carried personally into hearts, homes, and lives.

What does it mean, to you, to carry Christ? May you be encouraged and inspired by the report that follows to carry Christ in your world in new ways.

For everyone, everywhere, in every generation,

2019-2025 Total Potential People Reached:

+3.4 Billion

Growth in Total Potential People Reached:

Gospel Presentations is one of the key metrics Every Home tracks as a measure of our work and progress toward the goals of the Oikos Initiative. Simply, Gospel Presentations can be defined as the number of times we share the gospel. If an Every Home team visits a home and shares gospel literature, that is one Gospel Presentation. That single presentation has the potential to reach multiple people, as many as are in the home who might listen to the team and read the gospel literature. In an effort to accurately communicate the true scale of the impact of your prayers, gifts, and partnership in this work, Every Home has begun calculating and reporting Potential People Reached in addition to Gospel Presentations.

What do we mean by “Potential People Reached”?

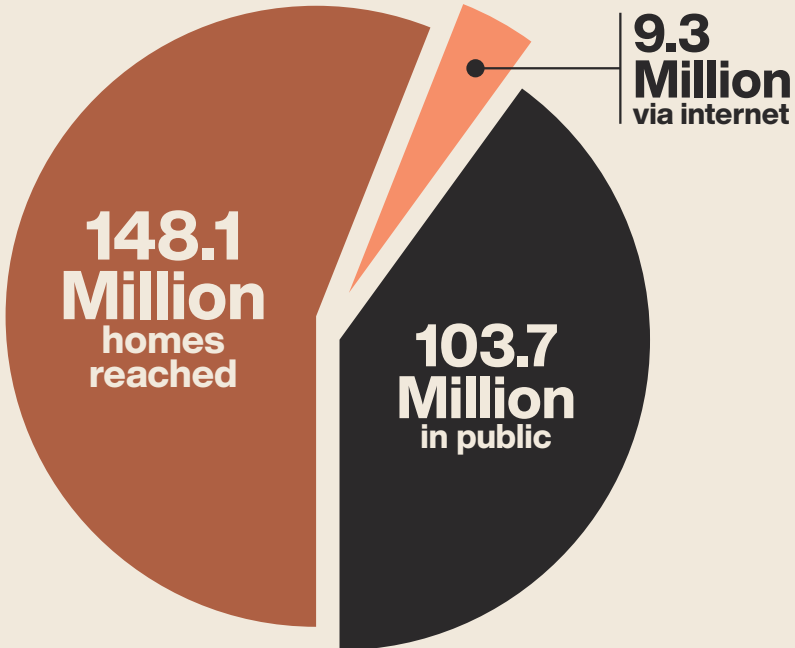

It is the total number of people we estimate have encountered Jesus through the many varied facets of Every Home’s work, including visits to homes, public events, special outreaches to marginalized communities, practical aid and relief, and many other strategies. It’s one of the key ways we track our progress toward the goals of the Oikos Initiative. We calculate Potential People Reached based on the total results of the many strategies used around the world and a host of related metrics such as average household size in each nation, gospel materials shared, and event attendance.

Total Gospel Presentations 2019-2025:

Carry Christ

We call ourselves “Christ-carriers.” That word sums up a calling and an identity expressed through countless forms and faces. We carry the Good News to literal thresholds, whether in high-rise apartments or desert tents.

But we don’t stop there.

We carry rest to the refugee and freedom to the prisoner. We carry hope to the despairing. We carry attention to the invisible. We carry peace to the fearful. We carry water to the parched and food to the hungry. We carry truth to the wondering.

We carry Love—incarnate and infinite, transcendent and transforming.

There are as many ways to carry Christ as there are believers answering Christ’s call to love their neighbor. Across Every Home’s global network, we celebrate the creativity and faithfulness of all the ways believers carry Christ, but we can only share a few. May these stories fuel and inspire you, Christ-carrier.

Carry Hope to Every Home

Location: Creative Access #12

“My name is Teresa. This is my home. It’s simple, like many others here. In this photo, you see my family during one of the most difficult seasons we have faced. My husband, who is in the wheelchair, has been seriously ill for months. We have gone through sleepless nights, days without enough food, and moments when we felt we could not go on. Life here has become very hard. Sometimes there is no electricity, sometimes no food, and often, no hope.

“One day, a group of believers came to our home. They did not bring much materially, but they brought something we did not have—a message of life. They shared a gospel message with us and spoke about the love of God. At first, I listened, but inside I kept wondering: where is God in the middle of everything we are going through?”

“Then one of the believers said something I will never forget: ‘God does not always change our circumstances first; he changes our hearts to sustain us through our circumstances.’

“The believers left the gospel literature and encouraged us to read it. That same afternoon, we read it together as a family in our living room. The message spoke of a God who is near, of a Christ who suffered and understands pain and who offers hope beyond what we can see.

“That day, we prayed together as a family for the first time. It was not a perfect prayer, but it was a sincere one.

“From that moment, something began to change. I cannot say that all our problems disappeared, but I can say that we are no longer alone. There is peace in pain. There is comfort even when there seems to be no way out. My husband, even in his condition, now asks for the Bible to be read to him. My mother, who did not believe before, now prays every night. And I have found hope again.

“Today, we are still facing difficulties, but no longer with despair. Now, we know that God is in this house. That day, when the believers came with that small piece of literature, they did not just bring paper—they brought light into our home.”

Carry Love to Every Human Heart

Location: Creative Access #41

The flat concrete facades on either side of the street created a canyon through which the bitter wind blew. Ben* hunched over, his eyes fixed on the ground as he walked. Maybe he would spot some loose change he could use to buy a drink.

Ben’s mother had died some time before. Trying to numb the hollow pain of grief, Ben spent more and more of his time drinking or trying to scrape together enough money to buy his next drink. “I started to lose my life...” Ben says. “The more I drank, the more I had nothing left.”

Ben’s neighbors avoided him. His brothers and several of his friends had turned to violence to get by, and now it seemed everyone Ben had once known feared him or wanted nothing to do with him.

“Without a job and without brothers and friends, I spent the night on the streets, collecting garbage, and drinking with people,” he recalls. “Life became meaningless.”

Cold and empty, Ben made his way down the street. He didn’t see the man moving in the other direction and bumped into him.

Looking up, Ben saw another outcast, perhaps even worse off than himself. Like Ben, this man had clearly been living on the street.

But the man told Ben, “Jesus loves you.” He invited Ben to a Christmas celebration happening at a church in a few days.

“I had not heard anyone say ‘I love you’ since my mother passed away,” Ben says.

Ben eagerly looked forward to Christmas.

“I was so happy that [someone] invited me to the holiday without rejecting me,” he says. “I cleaned myself up and went to the church with great joy. I was greeted by many beautiful people in very nice clothes. I was embarrassed and hesitated to go in, but they all invited me in. They were all kind to me. In the past, none of my relatives, brothers, or friends invited me in. None of them let me into their homes.”

After the celebration, the man who was preaching hugged Ben and prayed for him. It surprised Ben that a “big man in nice clothes” would embrace him.

Ben began going to the church every day. He is on the road to freedom from alcoholism.

“My pastor said that the patience and strength to not drink alcohol comes only from God, so I believe it...I love Jesus because Jesus loves me.”

Carry Healing to Every Street

Location: Democratic Republic of the Congo

“You should never have been born.” The words Alimasi’s father spoke over her shaped her identity.

Alimasi knew her father had never wanted her. Before she was born, he had demanded that Alimasi’s mother abort her.

“I was born into rejection,” Alimasi writes. “My father never carried me in his arms. He often said I was unwanted. I felt like a burden.”

Alimasi entered school, where she worked hard, but never felt like she belonged. Why would her classmates want to be friends with a girl whose own father wished she didn’t exist. Alimasi lived in the background, quiet and often sad. Slowly, anger seeped in through the fractures in her broken heart.

“I wondered why God allowed me to be born if no one truly wanted me,” she recalls.

When Alimasi was seventeen, her father left. Then he stopped sending money to support Alimasi and her mother. Alimasi heard that he had started a new family.

Not only did her father not love her, he would no longer do anything to help her. This second abandonment cut deep.

Without her father’s support, Alimasi and her mother slid deeper into poverty. Alimasi knew that attending university would offer a path to a better life for her and her mother, but each semester it was harder to scrape together the money for tuition.

She began to entertain dark thoughts and wondered if her life had any value.

One day, as she walked home from school, she met an Every Home outreach team who was talking and praying with people on the street. Someone handed Alimasi a piece of gospel literature with the title, “Where Are You?”

“I stopped,” Alimasi remembers. “All my life, I had been asking, ‘Why was I born?’ But now it felt as if God was asking me, ‘Where are you in your pain? Where are you in your rejection?’”

Alimasi read the message that told her that God knows every story before it begins and every life is precious to him. Alimasi broke down and wept as she never had before.

“For the first time, I understood that even if my father did not want me, God did,” she says.

A few days later, Alimasi responded to an invitation to attend a church service where she heard a message about finding identity in Christ.

“That day, I decided to give my life to Jesus Christ,” Alimasi says. “I let go of my anger and chose to forgive my father. Forgiveness did not erase the past, but it healed my heart. Today, my life has meaning. I continue my studies with determination and actively participate in discipleship Bible studies. I support my mother. I no longer define myself as the rejected child. I am chosen by God. Today, I walk with confidence because I know my birth was not a mistake, but a divine purpose.”

“Forgiveness did not erase the past, but it healed my heart.”
